Forward-looking Information

Certain information included in this Report contains “forward-looking information”. Forward-looking information means disclosure regarding possible events, conditions or results that is based on assumptions about future economic conditions and courses of action or attributable to third parties. In some cases, forward-looking information can be identified by terminology such as “may”, “will”, “should”, “expect”, “anticipate”, “believe”, “estimate”, “predict”, “potential”, “continue”, “plan” and similar expressions or the negative of these terms or other comparable terminology. Although the Corporation believes that it has a reasonable basis for the forward-looking information included in this Report, such information is subject to a number of risks, uncertainties and assumptions that may cause actual events, conditions or results to differ materially from those contemplated by the forward-looking information. Some of the factors that could cause such differences include social, legislative or regulatory developments, financial market conditions and general economic conditions. Except to the extent required by applicable laws and regulations, the Corporation does not undertake any obligation to update publicly or to revise any of the forward-looking information included in this Report after the date thereof, whether as a result of new information, future events or circumstances or otherwise.
